Dear Bill:

I was glad to hear from you, and this gives me a chance to send my congratulations and best wishes in your new position. You are undoubtedly pioneering and I am sure that you gave all the problems as well as the opportunities of your new post your usual careful analysis, and I am delighted to learn that it came out so well in your own mind. As you say, I was of course consulted, but I am sure that nothing I said could have altered the very high regard that the administration there had already developed for you.

I hope we can continue to have some occasion to communicate, and, while I hope to hear only good news from you, please don't fail to let me know if matters should turn out otherwise and there is anything that I could do that would be to the advantage of your continued scientific work.

With best regards.

Sincerely,

Joshua Lederberg
Professor of Genetics
